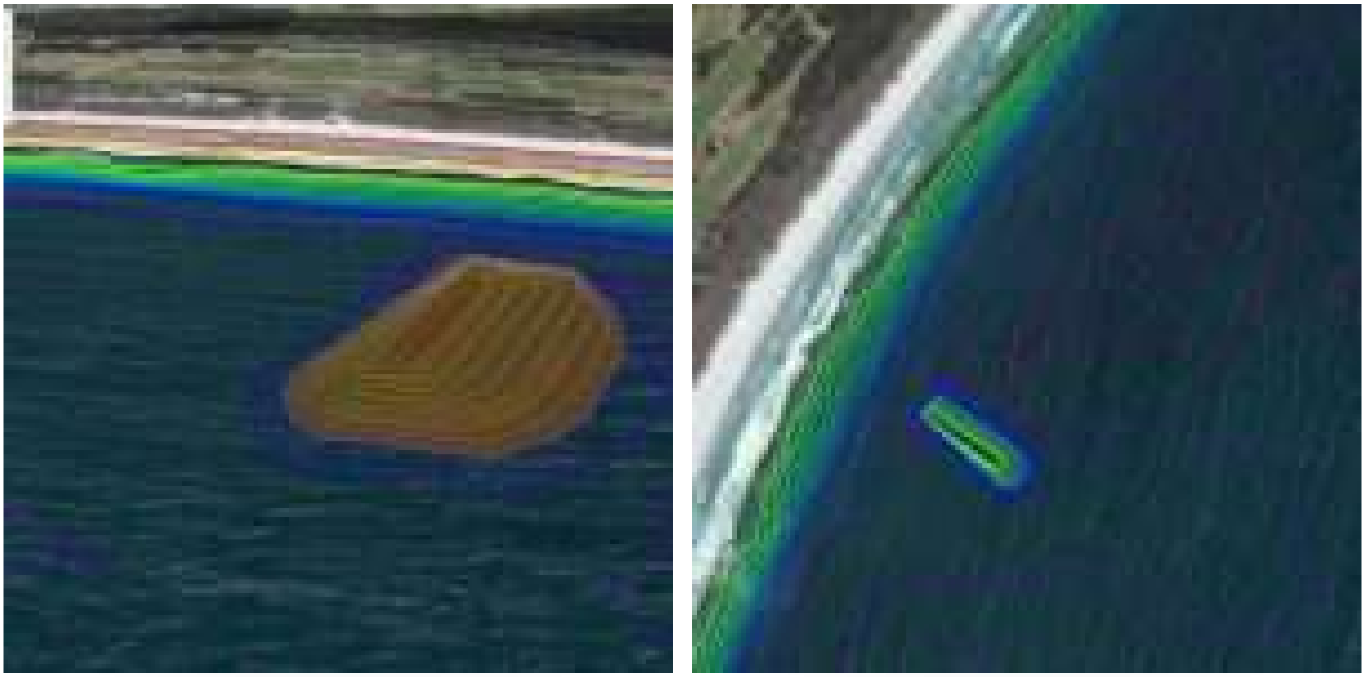
which are typically small and long-period, the waves on the reef will measure 0.8 – 1.5m on the face of the wave. The shape of wave will be similar to a fun point like Tea Trees in Noosa Heads, but on larger swells, Royal Haskoning and Bluecoast expect the wave to get more powerful and appeal toward more advanced surfers.

Bluecoast will continue the project by designing the details of the reef and testing the design in physical scale and computer modeling.



The Wave Energy Research Center a the University of Western Australia will peer review the design process, bringing world-class marine expertise to the project.

In the related press release, Regional Development Minister Alannah MacTiernan said:

“This is an important milestone for the long-awaited Middleton Beach artificial surf reef.

“The surf reef will be a real boon for
